INTELLIGENCE SUBMISSION

THE CHIEF CONSTABLE OF SOUTH YORKSHIRE POLICE, DAVID CROMPTON

AUTHOR: TONY FARRELL

DATE: 30th JULY 2014

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this submission is to respond to the Chief Constable's email dated 29th July 2014, and his invitation for me to submit a written report on the intelligence which I possess and wish to impart. In my opinion, my submission is of direct relevance to the Chief Constable and the work of his force, especially in the light of the "First Principles" promoting high standards of professional behaviour and adherence to a code of ethics.

My intelligence submissions come in two parts. Part one concerns intelligence I have relatively recently acquired, about a set of alleged very serious criminal incidents which occurred in South Yorkshire Police, under the leadership of Meredydd Hughes. The second part concerns intelligence I have acquired from the relatively well known strategic intelligence analyst, QC Michael Shrimpton, which I deem as potentially highly explosive, and directly relevant if he is speaking truthfully. The issues he raises are of grave concern, and elements should be of particular concern to a Chief Constable, who had involvement with community relations in Beeston, Leeds, post 7/7 London Bombings.

At this moment in time, South Yorkshire Police have given me every reason to be distrustful of their fine rhetoric, yet part of me still hopes that, as a police force, you can and ultimately will transform yourselves into actually becoming the best force in the country, as per your declared aspirations. Realistically, I know that for that to happen, some tipping-point has to occur where drastic change creates a necessary ripple-effect that reverberates throughout the whole of the corrupt police service, and strikes at the heart of our successive treasonous governments.

At your talk on police corruption on 4th February 2014, I made a passing reference to your role in Beeston, in the question and answer session before an audience. For me, the sight of you momentarily squirming, was the defining moment of the night. It was the one and only time that evening, where your obvious discomfort betrayed you. Only the discerning-eye would have been sensitive to it.

In that solitary moment a tale was told. At the mere mention of Beeston, in relation to the 7/7 false-flag attacks, the change in your physiology spoke volumes. At a deeply profound level, I know that you know that something is not right here. I know that you know that what's at stake here is massive. You are perhaps in an unique position, and you have it within your gift to exert tremendous influence for good.

It was no accident that I, as a former whistle-blower, was unexpectedly in the audience that night. At one fell swoop, I know you have the potential to break the chains and start to heal the wounds that exist, not just in that community in Beeston that has been much maligned, but also in the rest of barmy Britain.

The question is, are you up for the challenge, or will you, like all your fellow ACPO peers, the length and breadth of the country, continue to sell out your people and your soul. I invite you to read the following intelligence report and ponder carefully upon the implications.

ORIGINAL NOTES MADE OF A MEETING WITH JASON HOLMES

21st MARCH 2014

Meeting between Tony Farrell and Jason Holmes - 20th March 2014

The first part of this submission contains on account given to me by Jason Holmes, in which he makes extremely serious and specific allegations of criminally corrupt practice, in South Yorkshire Police, by the former Chief Constable Meredydd Hughes, in the cover-up of an incident involving a high profile celebrity named David Beckham.

What follows is a slight re-hash of the very detailed notes I made of the meeting which I penned the next day, and sent to Muad'Dib via an email. These notes are essentially taken from that date, but have been slightly adapted today for ease of reading by the Chief Constable, David Crompton, following his invitation for me to submit intelligence. Jason does not know that I am making this submission. I have not asked his permission, as the content concerns serious criminal allegations, and I feel duty-bound to highlight the issues irrespective of the risks and consequences for all parties.

Dear Muad'Dib,

Yesterday, I met up with Jason Holmes for a few hours in the afternoon.

Firstly, after listening to me talk about the forthcoming eviction and HSBC Bank PLC, Jason is willing to try to help film the anticipated confrontation with the bailiffs on 15th April 2014 at the flat.

In short, during our discussions, I found myself warming to Jason and I got the impression from our lengthy conversation that he was genuine. To my mind, Jason is neither shifty, nor evasive. He was understandably wary of me at first, especially after my talk to the audience in Sheffield in January, but gradually we warmed to each other as the meeting unfolded.

Eventually, Jason shared with me his own particular story. In the scheme of things, it could potentially be massive. To the best of my recollection, it can be briefly summarised as follows.

JASON'S STORY AS TOLD TO ME ON 20TH MARCH 2014

Sometime around 2005, Jason Holmes, who had been employed in the Security Industry, bought a second hand computer for £70, from a friend of his. When he started to use the second-hand computer, Jason noticed that data from the previous owner had not been wiped clean, and the computer held files on it from its previous owner. Being curious, Jason discovered that the computer had previously belonged to the managing director of Chase Securities. When Jason delved into the data files further, he discovered that the computer had been used as part of the management for security arrangements for the ex Manchester United and England footballer, David Beckham.

Jason claimed that the personal data stored on his newly acquired personal computer was sensitive. It was potentially a very compromising situation for David Beckham. According to Jason, it offered evidence to strongly suggest that Beckham was "gay" and promiscuous and frequented many "gay" joints.

Jason claimed that the data revealed that Beckham used to meet up a lot with Michael Owen, in an implied "gay" context. Jason said that the data on the computer also showed that the so called "affair" that Beckham supposedly had, was nothing but a sham to deflect the public away from believing any rumours that Beckham was gay. Jason told me that upon discovery of the personal data, he mentioned it to the second hand computer seller. He informed the seller that data had been left on the computer which was personal to and about David Beckham.

Shortly after, if my memory serves me correct, staff from Chase Securities were in touch with Jason, menacingly demanding the computer be unconditionally returned to their company. Jason however had purchased the computer lawfully and was therefore not prepared to just hand it over, in response to their initial demands. Jason had paid £70 for it, in good faith, and it was now lawfully his property. Jason claimed he was not the slightest bit interested in using the personal data, but was concerned about the implications about being sold a computer holding sensitive personal information on a high profile celebrity.

However, before he had time to blink, Jason's home was raided by a team of officers from South Yorkshire Police. The raid was done in the middle of the night. Jason claimed that he was dragged naked out of bed and arrested for alleged blackmail and theft of a computer. To the best of my knowledge, Jason had no previous criminal record. He explained to me how it was quite degrading for him - as petrified by the sudden and unexpected raid at his home - he desperately needed to use the bathroom. Several officers accompanied him inside the bathroom and stood watching him have a most unpleasant and unsavoury "Ertha Kit". He was then taken from his home before his young children in an undignified manner and put into police custody.

The police action was heavy-handed and one-sided based on trumped-up allegations made by a security company keen to stave off their embarrassment and negligence, at allowing personal and sensitive data to go astray in this way. What followed is shocking.

Jason was charged with theft, but the case was eventually dropped by the CPS because of insufficient evidence, although the police contact / fixer claimed it was because it would not be in the public interest. Jason told me that the latter reason put forward by the police officer was entirely false.

Jason's computer had been confiscated by South Yorkshire Police and it never got returned to him, in spite of him demanding it back. After the case getting dropped, which cleared Jason, South Yorkshire Police cited "data protection" as their reason for the subsequent non-return of his computer.

However, Jason pursued the return of his computer in the Magistrates' Court and in one hearing in Sheffield, "Team Beckham" and all and sundry turned up. According to Jason, the Magistrate seemed to side with Jason, but scratching his head, the judge referred any decision to a higher court. After that decision, the court shutters came down on Jason. How I know the feeling. And surprise, surprise, the case got blocked at every twist and turn and Jason never did get his higher court hearing, never got his computer back and never got any compensation whatsoever for its unlawful confiscation/theft.

It gets much worse. In an attempt to get some explanation for his gross mistreatment during his arrest and subsequent charge, Jason was granted a meeting with the then Chief Constable Meredydd Hughes. Jason claimed that during this meeting, he asked Meredydd Hughes about his force's relationship with a company called Chase Securities. Jason told me that in the meeting, Meredydd Hughes totally denied there was any linkages whatsoever between South Yorkshire Police and this company.

In response to the Chief Constable's denial, Jason then immediately produced documentation that showed Chase Securities had in fact a large business contract with training South Yorkshire Police officers. If Jason's account is accurate, it is proof that Meredydd Hughes lied to cover up the misconduct of his police officers and to protect the reputation of a partnership company, and also the profile of a high profile celebrity. In short, South Yorkshire Police had done their level best to frame Jason, an innocent victim, for an offence he clearly did not commit.

According to Jason, when presented with this compelling evidence which exposed Meredydd Hughes as an outright liar, Meredydd Hughes squirmed horribly and lost all his composure in their meeting. I have no reason to disbelieve Jason's account. Meredydd Hughes was a spineless Chief Constable.

Jason also then told me that he subsequently complained to the IPCC about his mistreatment by South Yorkshire Police, but the IPCC informed him that the case was out-of-time. Jason claimed that the IPCC admitted to him that his complaint about South Yorkshire Police would otherwise have been upheld. Jason claimed that the out-of-time issue was factually incorrect and just another layer of police state cover-up. Jason claimed that he had in actual fact submitted his case in good time.

This was just another systematic cover-up of the truth. The combined actions of the police and the IPCC are par for the course. After the CPS' decision to drop the case, and for a while afterwards, several of the national tabloids ran with part of Beckham's story on their front pages. Contrary to the verdict, the Sun Newspaper in particular, still misrepresented the issue as a "computer theft" and a "blackmail attempt". It was clearly no such thing. Jason mentioned that one local paper in Rotherham however, depicted the story slightly less inaccurately as a breach in data security of personal data files on David Beckham.

Jason claims to have been on the receiving end of a phone call with David Beckham himself. In phoning Jason himself, Beckham was hesitant, evasive and defensive about the return of his computer, because of the data contents on it. Jason told Beckham that now that his own name had been cleared by the CPS, he only wanted the safe return of his £70 computer from the South Yorkshire Police. Jason's position was one of acting out of principle. Jason said that if the police gave it back to him, he would even allow Chase Securities, to be present, to temporarily re-possess it, and clean up any personal data from it. Jason told me that he made it clear that it was the principle of his mistreatment by the police and not the personal data about Beckham that mattered to him. I was told that Beckham tried to explain why legally the computer could not be returned. Beckham's attempted reasoning seemingly did not wash with Jason.

I asked Jason if he had ever been threatened. Jason said that shortly after going to the court to try to get his computer back, he was cornered down an alleyway and jumped on by some enforcers and, in a terrifying incident, actually had a gun put to the side of his head and told in no uncertain terms to keep his mouth shut. Immediately afterwards, Jason went home in shock and reported the serious incident to South Yorkshire Police. Jason claimed the fixer – a named police officer called Steve Smith – was the only one who got back to him, warning him to drop the case and his report of the death threat. So instead of treating Jason's report as a major incident, South Yorkshire Police rendered themselves as accomplices in the death-threat. Fearful of the consequences, Jason drew back from pursuing his case further and thus through fear and terror succumbed to Beckham's bully-boy protectors, which include South Yorkshire Police PLC.

Jason claimed that the same fixer / police officer coached a junior football side in Doncaster. Jason told me that soon after this death threat incident, the junior club made local news for getting sizeable free sponsorship with all sorts of football kit, equipment and new facilities thrown in. Jason said that the named officer from Rotherham District was in his mid-thirties then, so he might still be in service.

Actually, I have since established from an inside source, that there is a Steve Smith who still is employed by South Yorkshire Police as a police officer. Therefore there is a strong possibility that it is the same officer who was involved in the alleged misconduct proceedings. I asked Jason whether David Beckham or Chase Securities had ever tried to bribe him to keep quiet. Jason indicated not.

Jason said that he has largely put the matter behind him now, as it became all-consuming for him for a while, and nearly destroyed him as a person. He said that the conversation with me was the first time for a long while where he had opened up to anyone. He has never gone public about the essence of the data on the computer. His grievance lay first and foremost with the disgraceful conduct of South Yorkshire Police and the serious trumped-up charges unleashed against him. His grievance lays squarely with the gross criminal conduct of police officer Steve Smith and the deceitfulness of former Chief Constable Meredydd Hughes. I asked Jason whether that was his motivation in setting up the Friends of the UK Column in Sheffield. He confirmed to me that it was.

Jason mentioned his own synchronizations with the Hillsborough Disaster. He said that when he was working for a company dealing with goal-line technology, his task had been to install it on the pitch at Anfield, home of Liverpool Football Club. Jason then showed me a picture on his mobile phone of him inside Anfield holding up a Sheffield Wednesday jersey.

Apparently, Jason had put the Wednesday shirt on an e-bay type auction site and wrote the name of all bidders on it, of which there were many.

When he actually presented the Sheffield Wednesday shirt inside the ground, synchronicity kicked in big-time as Anne Williams, the J96 campaigning mother, was present. Anne died shortly afterwards and at the time Jason met her, they were alone together inside the stadium.

Jason then went on about Alex Ferguson's managerial relationship with David Beckham and mentioned Ferguson's son in the context of some shady dealings with Real Madrid.

Apparently, Alex was dead-set against Beckham going to Real Madrid, but if my understanding is correct, Jason said Ferguson's son got involved and received £50,000 in his bank account for some shady deal. I don't quite understand this aspect of Jason's story and I am unsure of its relevance. However, his mention of Alex Ferguson in the same breath as Anne Williams resonates well with a prophetic like dream I had about a key role to be played out by Alex Ferguson in uncovering the truth.

My Own Take on Jason's Story Jason has a wife and children. He is about forty. His physical health is not great, but he is highly articulate, reasonably knowledgeable and very intelligent. Jason seems willing to tell his story publicly, to a degree, but I think he might be a bit wary of revealing the personal stuff about Beckham. Jason's grievance seems appropriately directed only at his mistreatment by South Yorkshire Police and those that threatened his life and that trumped-up charges against him. His account, if true, is a diabolical record of further police corruption and Mafia-type conduct.

Jason claims to have caught Meredydd Hughes in a meeting, lying bare-faced through his back teeth about South Yorkshire Police's relationship with Chase Securities and then flipping like crazy, once confronted with the stark truth which was exposing the Chief Constable as not just as an outright liar, but also a corrupt thug.

Personally, I have no reason to disbelieve Jason and I have considered the possibility that I am being set up. Jason is quite a strong-minded individual and he has a pleasing and refreshingly honest disposition. He is not easily flustered. I knew very little of him, but met him at the Friends of the UK Column forum, which he was jointly running in Sheffield.

Personally, I had little or no dealings with Meredydd Hughes in my time with South Yorkshire Police. Generally, I got the impression that Meredydd Hughes was arrogant and somewhat of an aloof Chief Constable. Not surprisingly, Meredydd Hughes never once spoke to me about my controversial stance and dismissal, despite my attempts to communicate with him in a civil manner.

As many people may know, Meredydd Hughes had roles at Gleneagles and the post 7/7 investigations and was afterwards awarded with a QPM. In an interesting bit of synchronization, Meredydd Hughes also announced his plans to retire from South Yorkshire Police a year early on 8th July 2011. That was on the same day that news of my case first went viral across the internet. The occasion marked the first anniversary of me being put on gardening leave for taking a stance before an ACPO chaired intelligence meeting on 8th July 2010. Initially, a retired Meredydd Hughes stood unsuccessfully for the post of Police Commissioner.

I once had a rather unsavoury encounter with Meredydd Hughes, when he was out jogging after work. I think it's relevant to share, because it reveals much about the man. This account was at a time when he'd temporarily lost his driving licence for speeding, and that was while his ACPO portfolio was as the head of Roads Policing. Anyway, the Chief Constable was jogging across the road in his track-suit, but failed to follow the Green Cross Code when crossing the road, and his carelessness caused me to have to brake in my car to avoid hitting him.

Fortunately, I was only doing about 5-10mph at the time, as I was turning slowly into the Victoria Hotel at Blonk Street. There was never any danger of me knocking him over, but with his strides somewhat jolted, Hughes stopped abruptly in the middle of the road, and, instead of apologising, gave me a totally unwarranted hostile glance, even though, if anyone was at fault here, it was him, for not looking as he jogged across a minor road, without so much as a glance to either side. Very trivial though this particular incident was, I make reference to it to illustrate his hostile and duplicitous nature, as it left me with a distinctly unfavourable impression of the man.

In the circumstances, I would have expected a smile from him and an acknowledgment that he was in the wrong, and that he merely forgot to look both ways while crossing the road - no big deal. That would be the normal actions of most people in those circumstances, but, instead, I got the opposite from him. Absent was any humility from him and I thought at the time that his misdirected anger, targeted at me, was a picture that painted a thousand words, showing his true nature/colours. Is this really our leader? I thought to myself at the time.

Arguably, Meredydd Hughes is best known for his interview with David Conn of the Guardian Newspaper. This infamous interview occurred on the 20th anniversary of Hillsborough and was almost certainly the interview which Andy Hymas was having to support, when later that day, Andy spilled the beans to me in the staff canteen at Snig Hill. This was about former ACC Walter Jackson's secret misadventures in the Control Room inside the Hillsborough stadium 20 years earlier.

Andy Hymas was white as a ghost having had to listen to Meredydd Hughes yet again cover up for his force's conduct over the Hillsborough disaster twenty years on. Andy knew that day that the truth was being further suppressed and offloaded, as he was clearly a tormented soul upon witnessing Meredydd Hughes' ongoing deceit.

In conclusion, knowing what I know, I assess Jason's story as highly plausible and I can easily believe that Meredydd Hughes played some part in the menacing mistreatment of Jason and the unlawful theft of his computer, taken from him to protect the reputations of the rich and famous. I would wish to add one further thing to this account.

Shortly after my meeting with Jason, I mentioned this story to Lt. Cdr. Brian Gerrish, RN Ret. upon visiting the UK Column Offices in Plymouth. When I mentioned David Beckham to Brian, I was stopped in my tracks and was asked: is it about paedophilia? Somewhat surprised by the question, I said no. Brian then claimed that he asked me the question, because he had intelligence from a reliable source, which suggested that David Beckham is a paedophile. He named that source as Bill Maloney of Pie and Mash Films fame. Brian Gerrish did not elaborate further. However, Bill Maloney's recent film exposing high profile paedophiles is one of the most disturbing films ever to have hit the internet, in my opinion, and is well worth a watch.

PART TWO – QC MICHAEL SHRIMPTON

INTRODUCTION

I know QC Michael Shrimpton from my employment appeal tribunal hearing in London on 15th June 2012. I met up with Michael again earlier this year. Others were present at that meeting. Secretly, I tape-recorded our conversation together as I had reasonable cause to suspect that QC Michael Shrimpton wanted to share sensitive intelligence with me. I was not to be disappointed.*

Subsequently, QC Michael Shrimpton divulged issues which in the overall scheme of things, are of direct interest to national security and the contents of QC Michael Shrimpton's utterances speak of specific treasonous deeds most foul. Part of this account was secretly recorded by me on an audio tape. I have copies of the tape safely stored away in various locations. They are alarming and are of none trivial issues.

Shrimpton's utterances concern terrorist activity and it is potentially offered up to the Chief Constable, because of the serious nature of the content. Shrimpton's discussion involves deeply profound intelligence concerned with terrorist activity. The intelligence concerns, amongst other things, specific details about the 7/7 London Bombings and the location of the simultaneous detonation of the bomb explosions, which intelligence obtained from Michael Shrimpton, QC suggests occurred inside the PARDIS restaurant (Persian) at 29 Connaught Street.

This aspect of my submission is deliberately being withheld, for the time-being, as I want to see first, how my former employers respond to my first submission with respect to Jason Holmes' account of his dreadful mistreatment. I adopt such a position because I have repeatedly made numerous requests to speak to the Chief Constable in person. I am not yet willing to disclose the full content of these discussions until and unless I see how my former employers treat the intelligence submission as outlined in part one. Please ensure that nothing untoward happens to Jason Holmes as a result of my disclosing this information.

I repeat also that I require a meeting, not with some back office police officer, but with the Chief Constable David Crompton and the Senior Command Team, before I divulge this part in full. Anything less will result in my not holding anything back, when we decide to unleash the films I have been working on with Muad'Dib, over the last 12 months. South Yorkshire Police feature prominently.

Further abject failure of the Chief Constable to respond in a meaningful manner to part one of my disclosures, is likely to mean that this intelligence will get released to the public in an uncontrolled manner, sooner rather than later, and not one ounce of it will show South Yorkshire Police in a good light, over a wide range of issues.

I am not looking for a reason to depict South Yorkshire Police in such a negative light, but at this moment in time, your organisation leaves me with little alternative, and I have no good reason not to expose you all for your duplicity. Nothing short of a meeting at ACPO level is likely to prevent these films from emerging, and your ill-conceived offer that you might consider a meeting with a police officer, rather than with you, is treated with disdain and distrust. Actions speak louder than words, especially when yours sound so hollow. I want a meeting with ACPO rank, so that you lot have to look me in the eyes, when I talk to you.

Please prove me wrong. Be a force for good and speak the truth. Why not start with the truth about Beeston. There is no other way, only the truth will set you free.

Peace Be Upon You and More Importantly Within You.

Tony Farrell
