That was not an nda, Tony it was a confidentiality agreement to protect one show, the fitness show. I know exactly what I signed and I did not break any confidence.

What she wanted to do is protect a complete format, we absolutely refused. Furthermore once a format is in common domain protection fails. So if you create say a new way of growing turnips, you say I can't disclose it. Once you reveal that secret in a public forum it's public info. I have never made a show called the fitness show nor revealed the contents of Sevens documents. You really must do detail Tony. A confidentiality agreement is very specific. Read the document I signed it is for one show only. You cannot protect derivatives of a show which is what Seven is trying to do. Pop idol and X factor and Britain's got talent plus the voice are essentially the same show. You cannot protect spin offs.
