Dear Richard,

Good morning and good wishes.

Thank-you again for your emails, both yesterday evening and this morning. I will look at them in more detail later. I just thought I drop you a quick line in the meantime.

My motivation for helping Seven with the report derived from a Daniel 5 experience. Call it a circumstantial sign I received, if you wish. Publicising that story may be for later though.

As I say though, I do not work for Seven now. What I did to help her write the report, was entirely voluntary. I sensed her case had strategic importance, and nothing has changed my mind on that. I became appalled by the nature of the gang-stalking to which she was being subjected. Having stayed at her flat in Lancaster Gate for a few weeks, in order to gain access to some of her carefully guarded court files, I witnessed the abuse first-hand. It was sick and depraved.

Somebody, somewhere is pulling the strings to inflict this exquisite torment upon her. I have my suspicions who that is. My report focused mainly on documenting that aspect and the corrupt process. I did not seek to unpick all that was before Pumfrey. That would have been a massive undertaking beyond my resources at the time.

I have not been associated with any of the Sevensgate stuff. How Ms. Seven pursues things from now onwards, is really down to her. I did what I could given the constraints I was under back in 2013. These days, I seldom have opportunities to speak with Ms. Seven. If she ever has need of me as a witness, I will speak with honesty about what I did, what I know, and what I have witnessed.

That email to Crompton which triggered your interest in me, was motivated more by a frustration with the abject failure of South Yorkshire Police to walk their talk. They are a corrupt organisation, and I'm afraid it took me 17 years to realise that. Since getting chucked out the service, my attention and focus has been on Sheffield and South Yorkshire Police. In that sense, Ms. Seven is connected with my former employers, only because we chose to hand over the joint report to Crompton, rather than Hogan-Howe. To be honest, it took me by surprise to be contacted by you. The Seven case was not really at the forefront on my interests, so your contact with me like this has rekindled the flame so to speak.

I don't know much about you, Richard. I am not an offender profiler or a psychologist, but I did get training in criminal intelligence analysis. If I had to guess what you did previously, I would say you might have worked in the police service or military in some capacity, but I don't know. If you want to tell me, please do.

It has been quite an experience communicating with you in written emails. I am paying attention to what you write. I heard your versatile voice on your Big Radio Show for the first time recently. You have the gift of the gab, but even if I were to assume that you were somehow innocent of any blame here, I thought that you were most unkind towards Ms. Seven, given her ordeal.

On your two broadcasts, you showed no empathy to this lady, who you lured to Feltham on that fateful 11th November day back in 2003. It is impossible to reconcile the awful things you write and say about Ms. Seven with all the complimentary things said about her by Nicholas Pumfrey. It does not add up.

Time alone will tell who is right and who is wrong here. Nothing that you have written so far, persuades me that Seven did not have a valid case. You had a case to answer but you did not show. Over and above her claims about her intellectual property, the sinister gang-stalking episodes prior to, during and even after these court hearings, merit criminal investigations in their own right, but in police-state UK today, those in positions of authority are devoid of all integrity. That saddens me and you will have seen a reflection of all that in some of my own video movies, if you have watched them.

Finally, I suspect you won't bother, but if you really want to head Home, you will need to read and digest this.
